The California Preterm Birth Initiative takes a different approach to research by co-creating our research agenda with those most affected by the preterm birth epidemic: namely families and communities of color. By working together at all stages of the research process, we hope to uncover effective solutions more quickly.

In honor of Mother's Day, we are unveiling the research priorities of parents of color in San Francisco, Oakland, and Fresno. By sharing these detailed lists of unanswered pregnancy and birth questions, as well as the process of co-creating these lists, we are calling on funders, researchers, as well as social and clinical providers to refocus their work to include the input of those most impacted by preterm birth.
